Chapter 163: The Awakening of the Third Dragon Heart

For those Sung Su-Ho's worshippers among the Sung Dynasty, a new divine blessing awaited them as they reached a monumental milestone. While the worshippers of Sung Jin-Woo received their third heart — the black heart — those who worshipped Sung Su-Ho were granted a different yet equally potent gift upon reaching level 500: the third dragon heart, which was a mark of their deep connection to the God of Dragonic Power and his immense strength.

The Three Hearts of Sung Su-Ho's Worshippers

By now, the Sung Dynasty's worshippers were fully devoted to the Divine Triad, each bearing their own unique blessings. For the worshippers of Sung Su-Ho, their hearts were closely intertwined with the powerful dragonic essence of their divine ancestor. Upon reaching the legendary level 500, they unlocked the third dragon heart — an extraordinary boon that further enhanced their strength, endurance, and connection to Sung Su-Ho's power.

1. Original Heart: The first heart was a symbol of their mortal origins, the heartbeat that kept their physical bodies alive. Though not a source of magical power, it represented their humanity and was the basis for their connection to the world around them. However, this heart alone was not sufficient to access the immense power of the divine.

2. Second Heart: Dragon Heart: The second heart granted to Sung Su-Ho's worshippers was the dragon heart, the source of their mana and flames. It allowed them to harness the incredible dragonic power of Sung Su-Ho and filled them with unlimited mana reserves, enabling them to wield immense flame-based powers. This heart served as their primary source of magical energy and strength, making them formidable opponents in battle. With the dragon heart, their abilities to wield fire, control dragons, and perform destructive feats grew exponentially.

3. Third Heart: Second Dragon Heart: The third heart, the second dragon heart, was the final step in the divine evolution for Sung Su-Ho's worshippers. When activated upon reaching level 500, it granted them a significant increase in their already impressive power, enhancing their ability to produce and control even greater flames and mana. This heart was a continuous extension of the power granted by the first two hearts, amplifying the dragon heart's effects even further.

The second dragon heart was not only a source of extended mana but also of extended flames, making worshippers far more capable of enduring prolonged battles and unleashing destructive waves of fire. It also made them incredibly resilient, allowing them to endure battlefields with a virtually unending supply of mana and flame-based power.

Unleashing the Power of Three Hearts

With the three hearts, the worshippers of Sung Su-Ho transcended the limits of ordinary mortals. Each heart represented a step in the awakening of their true dragonic power. As their hearts beat together in harmony, they formed an unstoppable force of nature, capable of bending the elements to their will.

The dragon heart imbued them with the strength to rival the mightiest of dragons, while the second dragon heart allowed them to wield this power in ways that surpassed even the most powerful dragons. With three hearts, they were no longer simply worshippers; they were true guardians of the dragonic flame, standing as the embodiment of Sung Su-Ho's divine might.

Their extended mana reserves from the second dragon heart ensured that they could battle for longer durations, without the typical limitations of energy depletion. The added flame control allowed them to unleash devastating attacks, making them highly destructive and formidable in combat.

The Power to Shape Destiny

With the three hearts pumping unlimited mana and flames into their bodies, the worshippers of Sung Su-Ho became a dominating force within the Sung Dynasty. Their divine essence, now at full power, made them immortal warriors with the capability to shape destiny itself.

They were seen as living embodiments of Sung Su-Ho's eternal strength, with their power so vast that even the Divine Triad themselves acknowledged their importance.

As these worshippers began to gather strength and evolve, they became pivotal in the defense and expansion of the Sung Dynasty, carrying out their divine ancestor's will in every corner of the Absolute Realm and beyond. Their power was not limited to physical combat; they also became keepers of fire, wielding the flames of creation and destruction alike.

The Path of Ascension

For those within the Sung Dynasty who worshipped Sung Su-Ho, the path to ascension was clear: through their unwavering devotion and unyielding strength, they unlocked the ultimate dragonic power. Their three hearts were the final testament to their transcendence, allowing them to surpass the ordinary limits of mortality and exist as divine beings.

As these worshippers continued to evolve and grow stronger, they knew that they had become more than mere followers — they had become dragons in their own right, guided by their divine ancestor, Sung Su-Ho, and destined to serve him for eternity.

Their connection to Sung Su-Ho was not only one of worship but one of inherited divine might, making them the true heirs of the dragonic legacy that would span across time and space, shaping the future of the multiverse itself.